Dear Students,

California acted early and swiftly in response to the COVID-19 pandemic, and in part due to that decision, it now appears some restrictions are being eased. While some businesses, retailers and restaurants are starting to reopen, AJU is still considering when and how to safely return to in-person instruction on campus as we prepare for the academic year that begins in fall 2020.

Please be assured that our deans and staff are actively planning for multiple scenarios — from modified in-person instruction to hybrid course delivery to a continuation of remote learning — with, of course, the goal being a return to in-person coursework as soon as it is safe to do so. We are examining what the “new normal” should be based on projections from local authorities. While our mission remains teaching, our priority is the safety of our campus community.

We will provide you with updates once we have more news to report on AJU's fall 2020 instruction. Please keep yourselves and your loved ones safe.
